

Dipladenia 'Red Riding Hood'

Rather than a vine, this is a sprawling shrub that can be trained on a trellis, but also looks and does fine as a shrub. Dipladenia will bloom whenever the temperature is above 50 degrees Fahrenheit at night with clusters of 2-inch-wide very deep pink to red blossoms with a deep yellow throat. This plant is perfectly suited for containers, hanging baskets, window boxes and landscapes. Allow soil surface to dry slightly between thorough waterings. Fertilize regularly. Annual; grows to 6 feet.
